Fremgangsmåte for identifisering av tekstkoder

Tabellen viser et utdrag av fremgangsmåte for å identifisere tekstkoder fra funn i resultatet:

UTDRAG FRA PRIMÆRSTUDIE	TEKSTKODER
«I was told I needed to be induced and they didn't give me any choice. It was very traumatic for me . . . I wasn't told why and I wasn't asked what I wanted or how I felt about it . . . I wasn't asked if I had questions . . . I didn't want to be induced so I went home and I cried.» (Vicki, Suspected macrosomia) (Coates, Thirukumar, et al., 2021, s.491).	Kvinnens opplevelse av manglende medbestemmelse Manglende kartlegging av kvinnens preferanser Kvinnen ønsket ikke induksjon
While some women reported that they were given adequate information, with comments such as "I was given enough information" common, other women commented that they were "left in the dark" with little information (Coates, Thirukumar, et al., 2021, s.492).	Kvinnen mottok tilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig informasjon
«I was happy to be guided" and "had a really, really great midwife, so I was very happy for her to call the shots and do what she does" were common (Coates, Thirukumar, et al., 2021, s.492).	Følte ikke behovet for å ta et valg Tillit til sin jordmor/lege Fødekvinnen overlot beslutningen til jordmor
Some participants reported not having received any information on IOL from any health professionals and, in many instances, felt left to 'figure things out for themselves' (Murtagh & Folan, 2014, s.107).	Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnen måtte innhente informasjon på egen hånd

'To be honest ... I think she was quite busy, she always ... just seemed a bit rushed, so we didn't really get to talk a lot but ... yeah, I didn't really know anything!' (Olivia, post-dates pregnancy) (Jay et al., 2018b, s.25).	Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnen opplevde jordmor som travel Manglende støtte fra jordmor
Few women sought further information from midwives, as they saw no need at the time induction was first offered. With hindsight, however, many stated that they would have preferred to have known more, particularly regarding the duration and procedures (Jay et al., 2018b, s.26).	Kvinnen hadde ønsket mer informasjon Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon
Half of the women stated that they had been involved in the decision to induce labour (Jay et al., 2018b, s.26).	Kvinnene opplevde at de hadde et valg
I really didn't have all of the information when I scheduled the induction. I don't feel like I got a lot of education on it beforehand. You know, I got one paper before I went to the hospital. I don't think it had a lot of information. I mean, the paper just tells you the date of the IOL, to call the triage nurse, and where to go. I really was surprised by everything involved with the induction (Moore et al., 2014, s.141).	Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnen hadde ønsket mer informasjon Mottok skriftlig informasjon Mangelfull informasjon om prosedyren
Women indicated that despite feeling that they did not have enough information about the IOL, they did not seek out this information because they trusted their clinician and their concern for the safety of the baby (Moore et al., 2014, s.144).	Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnen hadde ønsket mer informasjon Søkte ikke ytterligere informasjon Tillit til sin jordmor/lege
Most women felt they had received adequate information about the reasons for this recommendation and that the midwives were open for discussion about alternatives to IOL (Lou et al., 2021, s.246).	Kvinnen mottok tilstrekkelig med informasjon Jordmor åpen for å diskutere alternativer Opplevde støtte fra jordmor
The midwife who did the Bishop's score for this woman said the cervix needed to	Manglende kartlegging av kvinnens preferanser

ripen some more to which Jess responded with, "I guess that means I need to have the Prostaglandin" and reported: The midwife said, 'Oh, it's already in'. I guess it implies consent that I have checked into the hospital. For her, that Prostaglandin has been so long out of the fridge but you know, my child and my feelings about labour are more important and she could just take another one out! (Gatward et al., 2010, s.7).	Mangelfull informasjon om prosedyren Utilstrekkelig informert Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnens opplevelse av manglende medbestemmelse
Based on the medical record, macrosomia was the indication for 26.7% (n = 147) of inductions; however, 39.9 (n = 220) of patients noted that their physician told them they needed to be induced because "my baby was too big." (Simpson et al., 2010, s.28).	Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnen misforsto informasjonen
I was not offered any choice about an induced labor nor was I offered any choice or explanation about why the induction process was so rushed [3649] (Henderson & Redshaw, 2013, s.1161).	Kvinnens opplevelse av å motta utilstrekkelig med informasjon Kvinnen opplevde seg ikke inkludert i beslutningen
When women were asked about their needs for support with decision-making, more than half of the 689 eligible participants indicated that their needs had not been met (Schwarz et al., 2016, s.7).	Kvinnen hadde behov for støtte i valget Manglende støtte fra jordmor Kvinnens forventninger ble ikke innfridd
Continuity of pregnancy care (i.e. same doctor or midwife for most pregnancy care) was associated with positive decision-making experiences (Coates, Donnelly, et al., 2021, s.6).	Tillit til sin jordmor/lege Kontinuitet i pleien Kvinnene opplevde at de hadde et valg
